

The government court has broad jurisdictional authority for organizing the operation of the courts and tribunals for which it is responsible. Its duties include:

- To verify that the posts of judges assigned to the said courts are adequately filled.
- Analyzing the complaints lodged by citizens regarding the administration of justice.
- Reviewing the sanctions imposed by judges on participants in judicial proceedings.
- Proposing inspection visits to the presidents.
- Maintaining institutional relations with other public administrations with the aim of improving the functioning of the administration of justice.
- Preparing studies and proposals directed at the General Council of the Judiciary.
- To exercise disciplinary faculties over magistrates and judges.
